

Casual Clothes Day
TOMORROW!

THE BABYSITTER

I want you to imagine you hired a babysitter so you could go out to dinner. They seemed innocent enough, and even helpful, keeping the children amused, keeping them safe, and contacting you when there was a problem. So you make it a regular thing.

But after you had known them for some time you discovered that whilst you were away they were introducing things to your children that you were not happy about, and they were teaching them to keep it a secret. Over a period of time, the sitter had taught them to use bad language, to be rude to each other, to dislike people for the simplest reasons, like how they looked, what clothes they wore, or the colour of their skin. They taught them to bully those they disliked, and even showed them how to find adult content.

How would you respond to this? What would you do with your babysitter when you discovered what was happening? I want to suggest to you that this is exactly what an unmonitored and unrestricted mobile device is doing with your children.

At first it seems harmless enough, and even helpful, keeping your children amused, even safe and allowing them to contact you when they need to. But what you don't realise is that whilst you are not watching, and through a variety of social platforms, it is teaching them things that you do not want. It is teaching them language, rudeness and bullying. It is teaching them adult concepts, and it is teaching them to keep all of these things a secret.

So let me ask the question again, "If you knew what the babysitter was doing, what would you be doing about that?"
